"We had a late start on the construction of our new corporate suites and control tower at National Trail Raceway.

The delay was caused by an unexpected but necessary design change. Consequently, Renier was not able to start construction until October of 1996, and with the Spring Nationals coming up that following June, the pressure on everyone was tremendous. We found out that this is when the folks at Renier are at their best. Because of their ability to deal with problems and work well with third-party contractors, we made up for the lost time. They even followed through after completion. We consider this new tower the 'flagship' of the circuit. We may have been late off the starting line,

But Renier helped us win the race."
